

Ecological Society of America Wildfire Search of Entire Archive on 11/27/2002

Issues in Ecology, Oct 22 2002

- such as wildfire, windthrow, and pests than intensively managed forests.
- that some natural disturbance such as wildfire, windstorm, insects, or
- prescribed fire and/or managed natural wildfire programs to achieve goals
- We consider here evidence from three types of disturbance: wildfire, windthrow,
- Wildfire
- many decades that a managed landscape is less susceptible to wildfire than
- Some of the greatest wildfire risks and most difficult
- clearcutting is comparable to the destruction of a forest stand by wildfire.
- to frequent light- to moderate-intensity wildfire, which produced complex
- Rather than a destabilizing force, wildfire plays
- illustrated by comparing intense wildfire and windstorm events with clearcutting

ESA REPORT ON THE SCIENTIFIC BASIS OF ECOSYSTEM MANAGEMENT,

Oct 15 2002

- logging might be viewed as a replacement for wildfire.

Untitled, Oct 15 2002

- agriculture, and settlement, but also can be caused by wildfire, wind,

ESA Report on the Endangered Species Act, Oct 15 2002

- such as wildfire, disease, or alien species introduction could wipe out

Issues in Ecology, Sep 20 2002

- wildfire, windthrow, and pests than intensively managed forests. Indeed, there
- disturbance such as wildfire, windstorm, insects, or disease will eventually
- managed natural wildfire programs to achieve goals related to maintenance of
- consider here evidence from three types of disturbance: wildfire, windthrow, and
- Wildfire It has been an article of faith in forestry for many decades that a
- managed landscape is less susceptible to wildfire than a wild landscape. Indeed,
- Some of the greatest wildfire risks and most difficult
- comparable to the destruction of a forest stand by wildfire. In light of current
- moderate-intensity wildfire, which produced complex late-successional forest
- Rather than a destabilizing force, wildfire plays a critical
- comparing intense wildfire and windstorm events with clearcutting (Figure 9).